

Saving Greece

In a distant time we find Ancient Greece.

In this land, the Kings ruled the cities and the struggles between them were frequent. There was no unity among the peoples and the conquest of land was always a goal.

Taking advantage of these times of war, the Gorgons realized that they had the ideal opportunity to conquer the entire territory.

These magical beings, with the power to turn anyone who looked them in the eye to stone, had the dream of ruling Greece, and no army would stop them.

Returning from another adventure together with the Argonauts, Atalanta arrived in Athens and encountered the invasion of the Gorgons. Determined to stop these advances at all costs, Atalanta gathered her friends. I was going to need all the help to get through this challenge!

The Argonauts came together, trying to figure out how best to act. Suddenly, something appeared from the water. Something huge and fierce... the Kraken!

The Kraken had invaded Athens and was destroying everything around it.

Being so big, the Argonauts were failing to defeat him. To help with this task, Atalanta remembered to turn to the Pegasus, the flying horse of Zeus. Thus, while Atalanta went to try to locate the Pegasus, the remaining Argonauts were left to defend Athens.

Atalanta went into the forest and asked the Nymphs who lived there where he could find the Pegasus.

"In the middle of the forest," they replied.

After much walking, they finally managed to find the Pegasus and headed for Athens.

When he arrived in Athens with the Pegasus, Atalanta joined the Argonauts and they went to defeat the Kraken.

Mounted on the Pegasus, Atalanta jumps to the ground. Hercules jumps up the Pegasus and flies towards the Kraken.

Taking advantage of his speed, Atalanta raises a cloud of dust that diminishes the Kraken's vision, giving Hercules the opportunity to attack the Kraken by surprise. Hercules, with the help of the Pegasus, flew over the Kraken's head and, taking advantage of the moment of distraction, jumps over his head and sticks a knife in his eye.

The Gorgons felt the spilled blood of the Kraken and realized that the Argonauts saw trying to stop them. But they still had to try to get through the Minotaur's labyrinth.

The Argonauts continued their adventure. As they travelled towards the base of the Gorgons, celebrated the defeat of the Kraken, aware that they would have to face greater dangers and that some of those faces might disappear.

After a few hours, the Argonauts arrive at the base of the Gorgons, but have come across a giant labyrinth. They realized that it was not just any labyrinth, it was the Minotaur's Labyrinth!!! The Argonauts exchanged words with each other and came to the conclusion that they were going to enter.

All the Argonauts felt goosebumps from head to toe, afraid to find the Minotaur. They all went on in silence and with more care than you had ever had.

Suddenly they hear a noise coming from the darkness, they look more closely and they see the MINOTAUR!!! The Argonauts begin to run back and forth, until Atalanta tells all the disoriented Argonauts to think of ways to defeat the Minotaur.

In this, Jason remembers setting a trap. Jason tells all the other Argonauts his idea, and they all agree. Atalanta attracted the attention of the Minotaur, while Theseus, Jason and Hercules set the trap. When Atalanta hears Theseus' cry, warning her that the trap was set, Atalanta ran as fast as she could to the place where the trap was. As planned, the Minotaur gets caught in the trap and the Argonauts continue on their way. After some time, the Argonauts had left the Labyrinth of the Minotaur.

The Argonauts were finally before the base of the Gorgons. With courage and fear, the Argonauts entered the base.

Inside the base, the Gorgons were already waiting for them. The Argonauts assumed their positions of attack and attacked, as did the Gorgons. They fought, fought, and fought until all the Gorgons were defeated.

Our Argonauts learned a valuable lesson that day, that if they join forces, they can defeat any enemy that comes in their way!

With the conclusion of this adventure, Greece lived in peace.
